The changing face of Environmental Health more and more for less and less

Call for Papers

Staffing problems, policy making, multi-tasking, health promotion, future planning, para-professionals, changing roles, changing priorities...

Are these some of the emerging issues that you face today?

The role of the Environmental Health Professionals is being redefined. Are we ready for change? Is it good for the profession? Do we need to market our profession? Do we need to rethink our priorities? This year's EHAA National Conference is focused on trying to find the answers to these and many such questions.

It is with great enthusiasm that the EHAA 2010 Conference Committee invites presenters from the environmental health and allied professions, wanting to make a difference, with a direction in mind or with a passion for the profession; to share your knowledge and experience with attendees from both the metropolitan and country regions.

Topics of interest:

Changes to the food legislation | Business planning | Innovations and sustainability
Indigenous health and welfare | Health Promotion | Preparation of Health Plans |
Emergency Management and Disaster Preparedness | Pest Control | Noise Management Solutions |

In addition to Conference Day, we will provide delegates with two days of workshops on topics that will benefit environmental health professionals with their day to day duties.

Do you feel you have a topic of interest to our group? Please complete the attached Expression of Interest or email the conference committee at info@envirohealthaustralia.com.au. A member of the committee will contact you to confirm your available times.
